"My images reflect my varied interests in myth, dream, poetry, history, and art. I am also inspired by the beautiful mountain top and the community of artists where I live. It is said: 'Paint what you know'. I would add 'Paint what you love'. The dreaming cats are both of these for me, and are also metaphors for spiritual experience. Little cat friends keep me company while I paint, and their dreaming faces open doors of imagination. Understanding awareness, waking or dreaming, is the quest of a lifetime which I've used to enrich my art. The crane is a Jungian symbol for consciousness. It invites, teases, guides us to another layer of reality that is always elusive. These glimpses of a deeper understanding keep me exploring, and give intrigue to my art, with a sense of knowingness, but without being able to say what it's about." ~ Diana Harvey

If you feel unity, serenity and/or love when you view my paintings, then I have accomplished my purpose. When we quiet ourselves in meditation we learn it is safe to feel. Feeling is knowing. Knowing is confidence. Confidence leads us back to our higher self, helping us to be our highest vision of ourselves at all times.

~ Carol Peacock

"Cory and I enjoy making custom handcrafted jewelry. Every piece in our collection is a collaborative effort. We share in all aspects, from design and fabrication to the finishing polish. We are constantly designing new pieces in order to always have an ever evolving body of work for our galleries to showcase and our customers to enjoy. Our current designs are created in sterling silver and fourteen karat gold fill. Each component is hand formed and fabricated in our studio from raw materials."

~ Cory and Lyla Allison

Details are fun. - TINY details are even more fun. So combining my love of details (and a whole collection of magnifiers) with tiny Delica beads from Japan - well... the result can be beautiful necklaces done on a loom. When I decided to learn this art form I went to the best teachers I could find...now I teach others who want to learn to weave on a loom.

~ Carole Sturgis

"I am fascinated with visions inspired by the individual. Images capturing a moment in time, an emotion, a unique revelation of beauty and truth."

~ Susan Storch, Photographer

My aim is to get the pictures out of my head and in front of the viewer and to do so with the greatest beauty, most magic, brightest vision, impeccable technique that I can.

~ Cynthia Re' Robbins

"My current emphasis is the documentation of the stunning seasonal scenic beauty of Eureka Springs and the surrounding areas. I also particularly enjoy capturing the character of this unique town as expressed through candid (or informally posed) portraits of the local inhabitants, both human and animal."

~ Richard Quick, Photographer

Though my roots are firmly planted in the Ozarks of Arkansas, I grew up in Southern California where I raised a family, and obtained an education and art degree. When I could no longer take the crowded conditions, I returned to where my mother was raised. For the past several years, I have specialized in pet portraits including also "Dogs in Old Masters' Settings". Lately, however, I am back with figure and still life subjects. With the help of Denise Ryan, my paintings have improved in both value and color.

~ Betty Johnson

"Indian art is a separate form of art unto itself. My love of history has definitely influenced my art. I am painting a time that has passed for the Native American. My goal is to give people insight into what it might have been like to have been there. Not necessarily the dramatic moments, but the everyday scenes of life."

~ Pat McAllister
